

Re: possible to upgrade

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2004-09/3222.html>

From: K. Carp (kathycarp_at_comcastexcess.net)

Date: 09/14/04

Date: Tue, 14 Sep 2004 08:15:42 -0700

Most times, when you buy a computer from someone like Dell or Gateway, if they say that Home is installed, you can ask them to upgrade to Pro. (For a price, though I believe it is minimal).

Kathy

"CLJ1219" <clj1219@aol.com78946321> wrote in message news:20040914090415.05710.00004672@mb-m14.aol.com...

> >I'm no expert, but no one answered the one question you had and that is if

> >Home could be upgraded to Pro. According to my XP for Idiots book it is > >possible to do that.

>

> Thanks, Barb. That was my question. Could it be done. I knew that older > versions of Windows could be upgraded but wondered if this one could.

>

> >There are a lot of reasons for an MT to want Pro over Home

>

> Since I don't do MT anymore, there are no MT reasons for it. I've used Office > and the "professional" versions of Windows for so long, I've gotten used to > them. There are a lot of abilities that Home doesn't have.

>

> >but if you know you want Pro why are you considering buying a computer > >with Home?

>

> I'll take either. The computers I have picked out all have Home installed. I > can get my daughter to install Pro without a problem but I don't want the > hassle of having to wait for a computer. I need the new one up and running

> ASAP.

>

> >There are lots of computers out there being sold with Pro

>

> I have found a couple of them, but really like the speed and memory better on > the ones with Home. Also, like the price (for what you get) better.

>

>

> Carol

>

> My mind not only wanders, sometimes it leaves completely.

>

>

>