

Re: The debate

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2004-10/0539.html>

From: Phyllis (phyllisnilsson_at_buckeye-express.com)

Date: 10/03/04

Date: Sun, 03 Oct 2004 08:34:11 -0400

And he might not even still be alive which would make the whole issue moot.

Anne Carle wrote:

> On Sat, 2 Oct 2004 20:53:41 -0700, "Eliyahu Roofff"

> <lrooff@hotmail.com> wrote:

>

>

>> "Judity01" <judity01@aol.com> wrote in message >> news:20041002154820.22494.00000194@mb-m06.aol.com...

>>

>>> ((The best results we could get from the search for BL would be for >>> our troops to emerge with his head on a pike.))

>>>

>>> Eliyahu, so you're advocating beheading? Isn't your comment in rather

>>

>> bad

>>

>>> taste with so many of that already going on over there?

>>>

>>

>> Hyperbole, but when we're choosing between taking him dead or alive,

>> "dead" results in a lot fewer problems with attempts to force his >> release via hostages and blackmail, and saves the millions of dollars >> that a trial would cost.

>>

>> Eliyahu

>>

>

> I understand everything you posted in response to me and to Judity, > and I agree with your description of their (terrorists') standards. I > even agree with Rae's comment that we've no doubt gone with "murder > for hire" before in our history. What I don't agree with is that we > lower our standards to handle him in the same fashion he handles his > enemies except as a last resort. What we do as a nation is always in > the spotlight, and never more than now because of the outrage of 9-11.

> I don't think Kerry's statement showed strength, which is what I think > he meant it to do--it showed malice and arrogance. He's basically > saying we'll do as we damn well please. I really don't believe that's > the way to cull world support.

>

> I dunno...maybe the world would like to see him shot on sight, but I > don't think most Americans want that. I think they want him brought to > trial--it's the American way.

>

> Anne/OH