

Re: MQ—are cheating employees on lines?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2004-11/3736.html>

From: SANDITYPES (sanditypes_at_aol.comshazbot)

Date: 11/18/04

Date: 18 Nov 2004 13:06:57 GMT

>On the other hand, those on other platforms before (such as MTShell, >etc.?) may seem to be "feeling" that they are experiencing a drop in >production due to a change in counting methods.

I genuinely don't think it's just a feeling. I worked briefly for them on the DQS platform and never could bust 200 lph when my normal is 400+. I have my suspicions about what causes it, but the "legitimate" part of the problem is that the ADT screen is time-consuming and you get credit for absolutely nothing you do while you're on it, only for what you type on the white screen after you finish it. If you happen to get a lot of short reports in the 1 minute range (which is what I got on that particular account), you're actually spending more time on the ADT screen than you're spending typing!

I hope your experience is better than most I've heard about, Mariette – good luck! :)

Sandi