

Re: Windows critical update

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2005-01/0552.html>

From: djgordon (danigordon_at_bellsouth.net)

Date: 01/06/05

Date: Wed, 5 Jan 2005 23:16:14 -0600

I would doubt you need it. If you were a compiler and building an application for a company to use the secure .net framework for their program, then you would need it, but if you're just one of us and don't do any application building where you might need someone, for example, to log in using a .net passport to your application, then it's doubtful.

Dani

"Jackie U" <jundercoffer@neo.rr.REMOVE.com> wrote in message news:%a_Cd.7941$iu5.2460@fe2.columbus.rr.com...

> I manually update all criticals and some drivers on a regular basis.

There > is one critical update listed for Microsoft.NET Framework which I hesitate > to follow through on as I thought someone had posted a while back about it > not being absolutely necessary. A search on Google was not informative > enough for me to get a good grasp on this program (or maybe it's just over > my head a little). :) Would anyone care to enlighten me if this is > necessary? Thanks!

>

>