That makes no sense at all. If there wasn't probable cause to detain him for the robbery, what was their probable cause to seize his car? Unless your city and county are having some turf wars, there was no reason at all that the cops couldn't hold the guy until city officers could get there to take him in. I'd give the prosecutor a call today, rather than waiting for Monday. Why give this idiot a chance to run and hide now that he knows they're onto him?
