

sci.med.transcription: Re: May I ask a favor?

Re: May I ask a favor?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2005-02/1347.html>

From: kathycarp (kathycarp_at_comcastprivacy.net)

Date: 02/14/05

Date: Mon, 14 Feb 2005 09:21:43 -0800

I saw this last night on 60 min. It reminded me so much of a couple of years ago... There is a hill behind our house called "Mt. Pishah". It has a hiking trail to the top, which is heavily used daily. Someone put a "clothes line" on the very top, following the peak, and hung colorful "sheets" of cloth on it, so that if we looked up at the top (sort of the horizon to us), there were yards and yards of colorful bits of cloth flapping in the breeze. I loved it. Even hiked up to see it up close. I think it was some art students at the Univ. of Oregon who did it. They must have been inspired by the Cristos.

--

Kathy

www.ambergriscaye.com/villadelsol

"Judity" <Judity01@aol.com> wrote in message

news:379ajuF579cj5U1@individual.net...

>I just saw Cristo's latest work on TV's "Sunday Morning" and wonder if any >of you live close enough to NYC to go see his saffron gates in Central >Park.

>

> Now, Cristo isn't everyone's cup of tea as far as art goes, and I've never > seen any of his larger-than-life works in person. However, this recent > temporary work struck a cord with me. Two words came to mind as I watched > the clip about it on CBS: Joy and Whimsy!

>

> So, if you live nearby and can spare the time, would you take a proxy walk > for me through some of the gates? You don't need to take a photo or even > do anything but maybe think of your online friend here and understand a > bit of me in those pieces of cloth blowing gently in the wind.

>

> Thank you in advance if someone will do this and let me know if it is as I > feel about it.

>

> Judity

>

>

Re: May I ask a favor?