

Re: PayPal question

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2005-02/2275.html>

From: Jay Vance (jay_at_vancedigitalDELETE.com)

Date: 02/24/05

Date: Wed, 23 Feb 2005 22:08:03 -0700

The thing is, though, ANY service she would use to collect payment is going to charge a percentage. Unless she plans to accept only checks through the mail, there's no way to avoid having to pay a service charge on electronic transactions. That's just part of the cost of doing business that you have to figure into your margin. I know a few companies that specifically charge an extra fee for credit card transactions, but very few.

Jay

- > Bambi, they take a certain percent so unless you raise your rates that
- > percentage, which would even put more money into PayPal's pockets, then I
- > think you would best serve yourself by using another method.
- >
- > It is convenient, but in that particular case, I don't think I would use
- it.
- >
- > V.