

Re: Windows XP Home Edition

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2005-03/2325.html>

From: djgordon (danigordon_at_bellsouth.net)

Date: 03/25/05

Date: Fri, 25 Mar 2005 10:28:32 -0600

I had trouble getting going on XP at first as it just seemed so foreign, but its ease of use and user friendliness has me sold. I like that so much is built in that it does so much automatically for you. I can take my laptop unhook it from my network, go anywhere else that's networked (my parents, my sister, etc.) plug it in and it recognizes the configuration and I'm ready to go with no extra setup. The only computer I haven't changed over to XP yet is this one I work on at my desk and I just never seem to find a full day to reformat and install it. Someday.....

Dani

"Neal" <nbrown12@MYcomcast.net> wrote in message
news:3airnsF6bg9rnU1@individual.net...

> I'm a happy camper! I made the display changes, like them. Then did > the home networking thing. Stumbling into 'My Computer,' I found 'My > Network Places,' and was very easily able to transfer directories and > files from the old computer to the new one. I am already starting to > like XP!
>
> Neal
>
> djgordon wrote:
>> I tell you the first thing I would do to make things a lot easier. I would >> go to my control panel in the XP computer, go to I think it's appearance
and >> themes and find the setting that makes the start menu look like Windows 98 >> instead of that silly way they have it set up in XP. Then tell me a little >> more specifically what you're needing, because otherwise, it works exactly >> the same. I'm running 98, ME, and XP on my network and it's not much >> different.
>>
>> But, do this first. On the XP computer go to your control panel, networking
>> option, and somewhere down the left side, hit the home networking wizard.

> > Let it do everything it needs to do and then when it asks if you want to > > make a disk to run it on other computers, hit no. Once you get that far, you > > should see it set up just like your original two that you had.

> >

> > Just keep asking, I'll keep answering. LOL

> >

> > dani

> >

> > "Neal" <nbrown12@MYcomcast.net> wrote in message

> > news:3ahmdlF5239vaU1@individual.net...

> >

> >> I got such great help yesterday, now I am setting up another computer > >> and haven't figured out how to transfer files.

> >>

> >> I want to transfer files from #1 computer that is running Windows 98 to > >> computer #2 that is running Windows XP Home Edition.

> >>

> >> Any help would be greatly appreciated.

> >>

> >> Neal

> >

> >

> >

> >