I thought it was don't blame the president for everything, not every single politician. All I can say is that stuff happens ALL THE TIME. We didn't have medical insurance just about the entire Clinton administration. I couldn't afford our meds all the time at 767 bucks per month but I didn't blame the President for that or Congress or anyone else. Economy is what it is and I learned that in economics back in high school. Sometimes there are slumps, sometime there is a surplus. We are living better now than we have in years and I don't give the Bush administration the credit or Congress the credit for it either. I don't blame people for my life and I don't give them credit for the good things either. There are some good things and bad things that come out of any administration but to think that one is the root of all bad things in your life is honestly ridiculous. At some point, people need to take responsibility for their hand in their own situations. If you don't like the administration, the congress, the senate, the governor, the mayor, etc. then continue to vote and make your voice heard. I would imagine that if Republicans were truly the root of all evil then one would never again be elected.
