

Re: Anyone had firsthand experience with Panniculitis/lymphoedema?

Re: Anyone had firsthand experience with Panniculitis/lymphoedema?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2006-01/msg02638.html>

- From: RaeMorrill <RaeMorrill@xxxxxxx>
 - Date: Sun, 29 Jan 2006 23:17:43 GMT
-

Poor thing has to pay double taxes. Wow. Well, it has occurred to me that as the money I'm getting from Oz isn't trackable by the IRS, I could get away with not paying taxes on it. I'm sure some would take the chance - I plan to report it along with my other income.

DJGordon wrote:

And I agree with you on that point. It could have been a nice food for thought discussion, but somebody turned it into Rae being a reverse racist (using my own phrase here) and just made the whole topic ugly.

By the way, I have looked at a bunch of pages on offshoring and its definition and while some may say it is automatically any business shipped overseas...in almost every instance the mention of LOWER COST LABOR is mentioned. I still believe that no matter what the term started out meaning it has evolved into those three words being a major factor in how it's thought of these days.

Honestly, what does any MT who hears the term offshoring think of? India, shoddy work, crap wages. Am I wrong? Now, my sub's work is exceptional, and she is definitely not paid crap wages...and she's not in India. I'm not trying to say I'm not offshoring in a sense, because I am with it leaving the borders, but she pays U.S. taxes on the 1099 I send her and she pays Swedish taxes on the same money. She is a very conscientious tax-minded