My grandmother was following a chicken hawk like that once, and unfortunately she shot just as her oldest son clambered up on a fence post to watch, and he was in the line of fire. Killed him. She died before I was ever born, but mom said she was never the same after that. This was during the depression, they lived way out in the sticks of western Kentucky (might have been Tennessee then, I can't remember when they moved).

It's sensationalism, just because it involved Cheney. It was Whittington's fault for coming up behind and not announcing himself, just like the article says, buried down in paragraph 10 or whatever. Of course, I'm of the mindset that all hunters should be shot...
