I use Olympus DSS recorders and the software is launched automatically upon docking of a recorder, but you still have to choose the file and choose download or download all. Then the client has to check the five folders to see if anything was dictated in the file they labeled letters versus dictation and in case one of the docs hit the new folder button in the middle of the regular dictation. My clients like them, but they have a designated "downloader" they hand off their recorders too. The recorders can be programmed with the doc's initials so that the files at least have that as an indicator for which files belong to which doctor, but the software automatically gives it a number of its own. So say that I was dictating a file onto it, the recorder would give it a name with my initials of CEP with a number so that it looked like CEP3990.dss. If I wanted to give it a new name, I would choose rename by right clicking and then do so.
