

Re: Digital recorders

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2006-02/msg01503.html>

- From: "Barbara Carlson" <bbcarlson@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Fri, 17 Feb 2006 12:40:20 -0500
-

My ftp site is set up so that each doc uploads to his file in my server, which when I transfer them go directly into the dictation folder in their main folder on my computer. When I set it up in their office I do that for them, then there is nothing else to be done. They just download and move the files into the ftp site, which already designates who and where it goes on my computer. I fire up my start-stop foot pedal and go get the files. Hope I made this clear. It is a very simple process. I also use a free ftp program called FileZilla. My son set up my server for me, which happens to use Linux as its operating system. It was inexpensive to set up and has worked very well for about 2 years now. If anyone is interested, my son has his own business in Colorado where he does this type of thing for clients, and also sets up and maintains web sites. He is well-qualified with a degree in electrical engineering, major in computers, and with several specialized certificates. I'm lucky. When a lightning storm fried my server I just shipped it back to him and he rebuilt it and sent it back—I had it back in less than a week. If anyone wants his e-mail address e-mail me and I can give you further information.

Hey, I can brag about my kids! Right!

Barb C.

"Chris" <chrissyete2@xxxxxxx> wrote in message

news:1140155382.398142.6400@xx

<I don't rename the files on my end, I just plop them in a folder with the name of the date of upload and the doctor. That keeps me having the original names in >

So you aren't able to use the auto download feature to keep them organized or are you manually moving them around to where you need them? We just right click and rename and then move to a folder for each doc. It comes out in chronological order that way. We also label the schedule files the same; the voice files contain a v at the end and the schedules an s at the end.

Re: Digital recorders