

Re: OT question

Source: <http://sci.tech--archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2006-03/msg02081.html>

- From: "Sandi" <sanditypes@xxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Sat, 25 Mar 2006 13:33:19 -0500
-

"RaeMorrill" <RaeMorrill@xxxxxxx> wrote in message
news:B3fVf.26548\$jf2.19825@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

Sorry, there certainly is! People who do not follow the rules of their religion, whatever it may be, certainly cannot call themselves a member of it (well they can but they are not going to engender belief in their values or beliefs by doing so).

If you have certain beliefs, there are some jobs you simply can't be in. If your religion believes drinking is a sin, you certainly can't go get a job serving it. The Bible clearly teaches certain things – sexual purity – a Christian woman cannot go dance naked on a pole in a bar, the intent of which is obviously not to inspire "pure" thoughts and call themselves a Christian with a straight face.

Okay, you and I just disagree on whose job it is to say that about any particular person.

Sandi