Then they are not taking advantage of feedback that could be useful to their growth.
Of course, if that feedback is given in a negative way, people are not going to listen to it anyways.

And what feedback is that, Ed? Where does it come from?

You're a smart lady, you tell me.

That's an evasion to the questions.

Gave your questions some more thought, and I apologize if I misconstrued your motives for asking them.

The feedback that I mention usually comes from a friend who in a loving manner provides constructive criticism, which is quite a different thing from being judgemental.

All of us make judgements all day long. We do that when we choose our friends, or to ensure our safety, etc. It would be impossible to live successfully without making them, but there is a very important distinction between making judgements and being judgemental.

I know I'm being judgemental if I start thinking that I'm somehow better than anyone else.
