In a dictation with lots of background noise, under surgical findings (yep, same doc, again dictating on a train), he's talking about the location of a mass in the pancreas:

"There was a discrete, roughly 3-cm mass in the head of the pancreas which extended to the uncinata and posterior to the superior mesenteric vein and artery. This was encroaching on the superior mesenteric vein just inferior to the (s/l osmos) with the splenic vein."

Part of the word may be clipped, but there's train noise and a banging in the background, and it's hard to tell. This is probably something I should know, but it's frustrating me to death!!

Thanks!

Anne
