

Re: If you still think we can win in Iraq..

Re: If you still think we can win in Iraq..

Source: <http://sci.tech--archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2006-11/msg00333.html>

- From: RaeMorrill <RaeMorrill@xxxxxxx>
 - Date: Sun, 05 Nov 2006 19:26:23 GMT
-

OH MY GOSH! You don't think the United States military should have to tell the truth when they are out soliciting young people to join? Yes, I'm prochoice – but it is not a choice when someone lies to you about what you're choosing. I can't believe even you would say something this ridiculous. If you purchase a service (say cell phone or any other product), you think you should not expect the truth? Sure advertisers lie or exaggerate – doesn't make it right. It sure sounds like you're saying that somehow these young kids should be expected to know the difference between truth and lies or it's their fault?

Phyllis Nilsson wrote:

They're all volunteers, Rae. They didn't have to join, it was their choice. And I'm pretty sure I remember you stating that you were pro-choice. Recruiters are advertisers. Since when do we believe the hyperbole of advertising?

RaeMorrill wrote:

Yes, but the cops have a choice: they don't have to be cops. They can quit any time they want. And of course now we have learned the recruiters have been lying to people telling them there's not much chance of going to war and that if you want to get out it's pretty easy.

--

Toledo, Ohio