daily life. How do you know what happened behind closed doors?

All you know is what you saw. I wouldn't hesitate to think that you would be crying foul if someone judged you and your parenting skills, christianity, whatnot based strictly on maybe one-tenth of your total life.

You never caught any of her TV shows, did you, Jeannie?

I used to flip through the channels and land on her show every now and then. Every single time, I'd shake my head in disbelief. I remember thinking to myself that she wouldn't be long for this world. I also wondered how that boy could be exposed to the stuff he was exposed to—just from show, if nothing else.

Anybody remember the feud over J. Howard Marshall's body and then his ashes? One of the reporters mentioned that a couple of nights ago. Seems they fought over his body (deja vu, huh?) after he died. ANS and the family had separate funerals. Then they fought over the ashes. The judge split the ashes. ANS didn't even bother going to get her share of his ashes—until five years later, when she got word that the Marshall family was petitioning the court to get her half of the ashes.

I think it'll serve them all right if there's no $$$ to be had from J. Howard Marshall's estate.

I do hope there's some way that Birkhead winds up being the biological father and gets the baby, though. I think he truly wants her—and has been petitioning the court for paternity since before she was born, as I understand it.

What a circus!
