

Re: I'm finally switching over to the dark side

Re: I'm finally switching over to the dark side

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2007-03/msg00846.html>

- From: "Ed Chait" <edchait4remove@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Mon, 19 Mar 2007 14:56:37 GMT
-

"RaeMorrill" <RaeMorrill.2nnebb@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message
news:RaeMorrill.2nnebb@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx

I think almost all new computers would come with an ethernet card already installed, wouldn't they?

Yes, pretty much any laptop or pc sold in the last few years would come with an ethernet card.

Don't give up quite so fast, Judity. If you're going to buy a laptop, just do it and be done with it. If you've got the equipment, they've probably started your account for cable, and now you'll have to go through trying to get that cancelled w/o any fees.

Any time that you make a change like going from dial-up to broadband or even just changing providers there is usually some degree of thrashing involved. That's just the nature of working with computers. There has been some progress in making things easier to set up, but they still aren't very "user friendly."

I would second Rae's suggestion to hang in there Judity. The dark side is more than worth it and it's usually something quite simple that needs to be addressed.

ed

.