

Re: Putting Texas' size in perspective

---

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2007-04/msg00961.html>

---

- From: "Susan Mitchell" <medlawtrans@xxxxxxxxxxx>
  - Date: Thu, 26 Apr 2007 19:53:24 -0700
-

Yes, but it is still Texas!

---

Sue -- Firefighter mom -- Still Rabid UW Dawg Fan!

(to reply send to medlawtrans@xxxxxxxxxxx)

"Bob" <nottooslow@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message

news:MPG.209b1f63b61aa8a0989887@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

We all hear the jokes about everything being bigger in Texas. This might put things in perspective:

Before we start, El Paso is the western-most part of Texas. Houston is not the eastern-most part of Texas, but is pretty close.

El Paso is closer to California than it is to Houston and Houston is closer to Florida than El Paso. Plus, Texas is the only state with three cities exceeding 1 million in population; Dallas, Houston, and San Antonio.

Bob/Texas