

Re: Legal question

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2007-05/msg00200.html>

- From: "Barbara Carlson" <bbcarlson@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Mon, 7 May 2007 12:09:34 -0400
-

Just a quick thought--Since your leaving the job is not your fault, but due to a change of conditions, and you are an employee, can you apply for unemployment insurance? Essentially they are dismissing you, you are not quitting. Don't know if it will work, but thought I'd toss it out. They may rethink the issue, too, if you are eligible for unemployment because their insurance rate would go up.

Barb C.

"Bam" <dearcounselor@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message news:5a8lhf2kh5eqU1@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

Well, as it turns out they can stop me from working a second job no matter what the original interview revealed. I do not have a written contract. I can choose to not accept that rule and leave the job.... this sucks.

--

Bambi

The

"Bam" <dearcounselor@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message news:5a1e8kF2madmbU1@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

Can anyone point me to a website where I can learn about the legality of an employer saying you may not hold a second job?

--

Bambi