

Re: Has anyone heard of "Girth Pain?"

Re: Has anyone heard of "Girth Pain?"

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2007-09/msg00314.html>

- From: Blupencl <Blupencl.2wrb74@xxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Tue, 11 Sep 2007 13:34:13 -0400
-

My goodness. I would not take a job like that for one second. Not one second. There are other MTs here who do their job the way you do. Not me. I am a hospital operative note transcriptionist, and have been for years, other than a few extra things I may have done on the side.

Glaring errors are pointed out, flagged, or fixed. The rest of it? Pfffft. It is not my job to recast sentences or change a statement as much as you described wanting to change that one. I know what to fix and how to fix it, usually, but lord have mercy, I could have made $50 (doing a good job, mind you) in the time you took fretting over this.

I hope they are happy to have you worrying over this stuff. I would have long ago moved on to greener pastures. I am in this for the money and nothing else.

Rae works like this, and does a great job, is never out of work. She really knows her stuff.

I'm not a sub.

I think Jeannie was just saying that she would not want a sub who did this, not saying you were a sub.

This is part of the agreement that I have with the doctor, and this is how they want things done.

Yeah, I reckon they do! Good on you for sticking with it. :)

--

Blupencl

.

Re: Has anyone heard of "Girth Pain?"