they had to do their 'dirty work/chores,' as in taking care of everything from the very difficult yard work, the garbage, cleaning the owner's whole house, the kids toys, etc. and out of nowhere he interrupted, riding on his father's shoulders, and said "Hmmm. I gotta get me one of those."

Well, when he grows up and gets married he'll have one. It's called a wife.

I just thought of something funny – you know funny things children say....Anyway, you HAVE to remember that he had no idea what the implications of what he was saying really were, but the sheer thinking behind it was what was funny....(nobody had said anything about black either)...We took our kids to Greenfield Village quite a few years back. Jake was proolly about 5 I'd say. They have actual slave quarters there with a lot of history, straw beds, dirt floors, etc. Anyway, I can't remember what brought it on, but he asked what a slave was. It didn't occur to me he wouldn't know they were mainly black people because of the pictures throughout the village. I explained to him in terms I thought he could understand. leaving out any mention of brutality because I didn't he was ready for that sort of history lesson at 5.... that many years ago people owned other humans and they had to do their 'dirty work/chores," as in taking care of everything from the very difficult yard work, the garbage, cleaning the owner's whole house, the kids toys, etc. and out of nowhere he interrupted, riding on his father's shoulders, and said "Hmmm. I gotta get me one of those." Actually I'm remembering Claire being in the stroller, so he might have been around 4'ish. lol.
