

Re: Dragon voice recognition will give 200% more productivity

Re: Dragon voice recognition will give 200% more productivity

Source: <http://sci.tech--archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2008-04/msg00447.html>

- From: ChuckM <cmattsen@xxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Sun, 13 Apr 2008 21:30:21 -0700 (PDT)
-

On Apr 13, 10:08 pm, Margie <nomoremargiesj...@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote:

My friend's son lives in a large apartment building in San Francisco's Tenderloin district. He plays the saxophone (quite well, I might add). One day, he got a note under his door that said, "It too noise." It's become our slogan ever since.

I used to live in the Tenderloin (315 Hyde, between Ellis and Eddy, if I remember correctly), though it's been over 20 years now since I was in San Francisco. Miss it a lot (San Francisco, that is; the Tenderloin, well, not so much :-)...

It's funny how sometimes the broken English we hear can stick with us. At my very first transcription job at the trauma center in Mpls. we had one Indian doc and I can still hear his voice plain as day in my head. I remember one report where the patient had fallen down some stairs, and she had "the falling, with the twisting and the backwards, and now is having the pain."

.