

Re: Good or bad medical procedures?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2008-05/msg00392.html>

- From: RaeMorrill <RaeMorrill.39qy3i@xx>
 - Date: Wed, 21 May 2008 05:38:36 +0000
-

These two situations are really totally different. In the case of the ambiguous, it is a deformity they are trying to correct – the child doesn't look clearly male or female. I'm sure there is tremendous pressure from parents and others to "fix" them. If their genitals look male, but they are XX, they will probably be condemned by some as "sinners" no matter which sex they choose to be. If they have what looks like a penis, but are XX, are they then "sinners" for having sex with (marrying for those of you who will say it's a sin either way) a person who is opposite of their genitals or opposite of their chromosomes? There is a desperate need to make things black and white, when sometimes there are very distinct shades of gray.

mountain Wrote:

Let nature takes its course. I'd say let the child grow up and let him/her decide later on as an adult how he/she wants to be.

—
RaeMorrill

RaeMorrill's Profile: <http://www.scribera.org/forum/member.php?userid=982>
View this thread: <http://www.scribera.org/forum/showthread.php?t=6711>