

Re: Forget hi-tech cures and dig out Granny's recipe

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med/2004-07/0776.html>

From: Rubystars (windstorm_at_swell.net)

Date: 07/11/04

Date: Sun, 11 Jul 2004 08:26:03 GMT

"Dr. Jai Maharaj" <usenet@mantra.com> wrote in message news:mk97mc6fnn02a2o00@v07rz810rzo7u30a105U...

> Forget hi-tech cures and dig out Granny's recipe

>

> By Carmen Reid

> The Scotsman

> Sunday, July 11, 2004

>

> The heir to the throne, hardly a stranger to controversy, > is being publicly told off once again, this time for his > promotion of alternative medicine. The rebuke comes in a > week when Gwyneth Paltrow, ever the celebrity fashion > leader, is accessorising her boob tubes with this > moment's must-have - a string of Chinese "cupping" > blotches.

I've seen those on tv. I think you could get the same effect by having someone give you a hickey, or if you're hard up, get a vacuum cleaner and give one to yourself. It's a lot cheaper than having some con artist create a vacuum with some cups.

> Prince Charles has recently established his own

> Foundation for Integrated Health and has urged the NHS to > offer both orthodox and complementary treatment under one > roof.

Looks like Charles doesn't understand the difference between real medicine and junk medicine.

> As a result, Professor Michael Baum, a leading breast > cancer specialist, has erupted in fury in an open letter > to the Prince in the latest British Medical Journal.

Good!

sci.med: Re: Forget hi-tech cures and dig out Granny's recipe

- >The
- > professor really has a go, accusing the Prince of abusing
- > his power. Power which comes from "an accident of birth"
- > he fumes as he denounces Charles. (So, there goes his
- > OBE, then.) "He hasn't changed his tune in 20 years," the
- > professor states. "He is still promoting the same
- > unproven remedies."

Indeed.

- > Scientific proof, medical evidence, clinical trials...
- > Aren't