A. chung has in past claimed he doesn't crosspost, he only posts to previously existing crossposted messages. In this example he more then doubled the number of groups, which in fact was posted in an original one alone. As he does this form of trolling and commercial marketing of services and childish attention seeking he invites negative reaction, in which case this and the original thread will very quickly become about a. chung and the nature of his problems related to web behavior and his claims about crossposting. That makes his claim about crossposting a lie, which he lamely responds by saying it it is a topic of possible interest in other groups; then post each and stop the spam. When his behavior is the topic he quickly diverts, or tries vainly in fact, to make seem an attack on his religious views. This is infact a form of lie as it clearly is not true. I am sorry my religious views offend a. chung, but his behavior on the net is his and he alone must own it.
