

Re: Chimera

Source: <http://sci.tech--archive.net/Archive/sci.med/2007-04/msg00147.html>

- From: TheAmazingGuffy@xxxxxxxxx
 - Date: 24 Apr 2007 09:19:52 -0700
-

On Apr 23, 9:26 pm, Terry <Kilow...@xxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote:

You hear stories everyday about someone living as one sex, but feeling like they belong to the other.

From what I understand, which is little, a chimera potentially contains the recipe for both sexes. It can also cause someone to have two different sets of DNA.

How much could this explain someone wanting a sex change?

You eat DNA every time your eat chicken, or a burger. Does that make you want to be a chicken or cow?

A pregnant woman is full of different DNA, does that mean she wants to be a baby?

You have bacteria living in your intestines that has DNA, does that mean you want to be a bacterium?

The answer to all of those is no. The desire for a sex change operations is psychological. Just like breast implants, or nose jobs, or liposuction, or any other elective surgery....

The more you know about medecine, the more "amusing" you will find medical shows like House and Greys Anatomy.....

.