

Re: Puzzling Leg Pain

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med/2007-09/msg00139.html>

- From: "Ed Thomas" <edthomassd@xxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Sun, 30 Sep 2007 08:09:04 -0700
-

Yup--I'm 70 years old and take atenolol, omeprazole, paxil, and univasc. At night I take 75 mg of generic benedryl for sleep. And, of course, a daily Centrum-type vitamin pill.

Incidentally, the pain-problem only started when I began daily walks of about 45 minutes. Now, even without the daily walks, the problem remains. I've tried several different ways of sleep with--and without--bed clothing. So far, the only thing that seems to help is raising the setting on an electric mattress pad--the pain seems diminished at higher settings, though the problem remains.

Any other thoughts?

Ed Thomas

=====
"eml" <mmlevy46@xxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message
<news:1191082257.610025.31920@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>

On Sep 29, 10:56 am, "Ed Thomas" <edthoma...@xxxxxxxx> wrote:

I've now seen 3 doctors (two of them, specialists) for a chronic leg pain problem that affects me only at night. Basically, my left leg begins with leg in the calf about 30 minutes after going to bed. In the course of the night the pain spreads throughout the leg.

Yet, in the morning, and once I'm standing or upright, the pain disappears until I again go to bed.

Had an arterial scan as well as two apparently thorough examinations by specialists. So far, their prescriptions haven't changed the situation, so I'm wondering if any others have experienced similar symptoms, and how they've treated it.

Any suggestions?

Ed Thomas

Re: Puzzling Leg Pain

are you taking any medications?