

Re: My mistake on Time Dilation?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.physics.relativity/2005-02/2652.html>

From: Eric Gisse (jowr.pi_at_gmail.com)

Date: 02/11/05

Date: 11 Feb 2005 09:40:58 -0800

guskz@hotmail.com wrote:

> I think the 3 observations below are correct?

I think you should stick to your Nostradamus crap. What drug-induced vision of your's inspired you to write uneducated nonsense about relativity?

>

>

> 1. Therefore if I'm not mistaken if two planes leave east and west from > earth then whom ever of the 2 planes decides to accelerate to see the > other one's clock will be the younger....

No.

>

> 2. or if both planes decide to both return and meet each othe half way > then once again their clocks will be the same.

No.

>

>

>

> So in a way...it doesn't matter whom left whom?

No.

>

> Meaning if one left Earth at $1/3c$ so he's aging less.

No – your conclusion, while correct, does not follow from your previous assertions.

>

sci.physics.relativity: Re: My mistake on Time Dilation?

- > 3. But if Earth which to catch up the distance lost between them then
- > 1/3c is insufficient, so if Earth goes 2/3c to see the departed's
clock
- > then Earth will be younger.

Work the math, if you can.

I can easily presume you can't because you still don't understand that composing the velocities u and v does not go as $u + v$.

[snip]