You? Normal? Narwhal, maybe, but about a normal as a K2 accretion disk bouncing of the surface of a B8.

"about a normal as"?
"bouncing of the surface"?

Paul

I spelt i in Norwhagian s that you'd undrstad.

Androcles.

So we can conclude that we are equally bad in English.

Do we, tusselad? It would appear that you have included some other person besides yourself in that statement. That other person cannot be me since I can reach my own conclusion[] and mine differ[s] from yours. Or should that be "my own conclusion[s] and mine differ[] from yours"? Where those 's's go is subtle, Tusselad, a non-English speaker give[s] himself away. It make[] him look as intelligent as he is.

Who is or are the other person or people with whom you concur?

My Norwegian is very good, though.

I'm quite amicable to that issue, tusselad. My English is also very good. We are not equally bad in English, although we may be equally bad in Narwhal.

I do confess that the only word I know in Narwhal is "tusselad" (plural "tusselader"). It reminds me of "tusk", which a narwhal has.

I do believe these hapless creatures are hunted by Esquimeaux. Kristiansund is further North than Kristiansand, I gather, being 240 miles from the Arctic circle. The Arctic circle crosses your country, Tusselad. Do you live far enough North to qualify as an Esquimeaux, Tusselad?

Which language do you master, Androcles?

C++, Macro Assembler, Pascal, Basic. I'm fluent in American and English, I have a little Deutsche and a little Cymraeg. Do you master Cymraeg, Tusselad?

If so you could teach me, my niece's child speaks it better than I. I doubt you could teach me the difference between impedance and resistance, though, even if they do share the same units, or even the difference between a K2 star and a K2 accretion disk. That's the main reason why I will not be recommending your little college to anybody anytime soon, no matter how desperate you are for low budget fee-paying students from other countries and attempt to misteach athletics in American. :-)
