

Let's see what happens

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.physics/2004-07/8947.html>

From: K. Jones (shadetree1999_at_hotmailNODAMNSPAM.com)

Date: 07/28/04

Date: Tue, 27 Jul 2004 20:24:44 -0400

Ok, two engineers at work are having a, ummm, "difference of opinion" on how to solve a useless problem.

I quote : "If you were to flip a coin – just a regular coin toss – there are three possible outcomes.

- 1.. Heads
- 2.. Tails
- 3.. Or it lands and remains on its edge."

Which has led to another "discussion" as to which newsgroup would be the most appropriate forum for this question.

One suggests sci.physics because of momentum etc., the other says probability, as you can neglect it landing and remaining on edge, because the possibility of it doing so is infinitesimally small.

Any suggestions I can relay to these two mental midgets?

Thanks,

K. Jones