I don't see what's so complicated about it.

Actually, you are asked to believe that by your government. Except, they were already in this country, in some cases training at air force bases.

NORAD, the military, the intelligence agencies and law enforcement just didn't seem to notice. Somehow.

Why would they run into a field, by the way?

> But we are > asked to believe that a 757 could fly incredibly close to the ground,

Erm, no. That's the government's claim, again. 100 feet is not incredibly close to the ground, for a 757.

Supposition on your part again. There was no need for a suicidal pilot.

When they just witnessed a huge explosion?

Again, this is your theory. Why couldn't the plane be flown over the ocean and destroyed?

> In short, your theory is a house of cards that just can't hold up.

Actually, that's your theory, as you just wrote it. Mine is that no 757 hit the Pentagon. It's a much simpler theory, and more likely to be true than your scenario.
