

Re: Time is a Property of Matter?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.physics/2004-12/0378.html>

From: Mitchell (macromitch_at_internetCDS.com)

Date: 11/22/04

Date: 22 Nov 2004 14:34:29 -0800

"Morituri-Max" <newage@sendarico.net> wrote in message
news:<dBiod.29775$g21.17884@fe1.texas.rr.com>...

> Mitchell wrote:

>

> > You're a joke because you won't get the point Porat.

> > Time slows down in gravity regardless of anything moving. It can be still > > and time is slower. Get it?

> > I know time is not independent of space and is therefor everywhere.

> > It doesn't need to be measured or detected in order to be there.

>

> Of course you'll respond to this by showing the math, yes?

>

> Show everyone the math behind your assertion and shut everyone down.. c'mon it's > easy... you HAVE to have the math to prove it, else you wouldn't possibly come > to a physics forum with just an opinion would you?

>

> Waiting for math with bated breath..

I don't know the math. Never said I did. Do you?

But I can still prove that time goes slower in gravity.

It shows up in atomic clocks sitting still on the earth.

You and Porat have a problem with me not with the physics. It's already proven.

Mitch Raemsch -- Light Falls --