

Re: GOD=G_uv Measure your IQ in 30 seconds

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.physics/2005-03/11926.html>

From: cl (cluna_at_midsouth.rr.com)

Date: 03/23/05

Date: Wed, 23 Mar 2005 15:08:48 GMT

"Mark Fergerson" <nunya@biz.ness> wrote in message news:YpV%d.160879$FM3.26448@fed1read02...

>>

> > Uh, no, as a matter of fact. If I had, though, I'm sure it would've > > been because I was laughing so hard at someone misspelling his own > > name going on and on about his GIANT BRANE.

>

> My point was that I _don't_ think I have a giant brain, despite the > high scores I got. I don't trust I.Q. tests one way or the other, from > Stanford-Binet to this speed-reading thing. One wonders how Meth addicts > would do on it.

>

> Too many people _are_ convinced of their own high intelligence, and > will go to any lengths to find something to support their convictions.

>

> Anyway, glad I could provide you a moment of amusement. It's _my_ > conviction that everybody deserves the opportunity to feel like an idiot > at least once a day, in the interest of keeping us humble. Had _your_ > moment yet today? ;>)

He is an ass Mark, plain and simple. Constantly hiding behind his mistakes by saying that he meant them out of jest and other lies. Don't waste your time with him like I do.

But to answer your question for him. No, he will never feel like an idiot because it requires out of the box thinking. He doesn't have the ability in him to admit mistake. It is all probably the result of childhood teasing and torment.

-CAL