Oh idiot.

far out in space , a moon around a planet can put motion in the planet if you controled te orbit patern of the moon .

The planet and moon orbit each other as they obit a comon low point. If te orbit was changed as so an deep eleipical orbit ,,that planet can be set into motion.

You can controle the direction and speed of that planet having full controle over the orbit of its moon.

Any change in the center point is a change in direction.

The 2 masses ,,the planet and its moon orbit a comon low point thats not at the center of the planet but the center of G is center of mass or center of combined mass .

The orbit of the moon will move this center point of G brwteen the planet and moon.

Damb strait that moon can put that planet in motion and drive it around space if you had full controle of its orbital paterns.

I could drive this planet around corners.

Again the gain of mass in evry atom was effected.

The resistance t resistance to impulsive force are absent in G .

2 planets the samesize would be hard.

10 % would handle nice.

if it could change mass gain 2 % the moon would change directions and go away .

G mass and E mass and mass are all the same thing.

The gain in mass is when the moon is nearest that planet at the point it is nearest .

Thats the point of the most pull ...to witt ..

G is the farthest away from the center of that planet at the point that moon is nearest the planet.

If I can contrle the moons orbit so I can controle how near and where the moon is its near miss eleipical orbit I can drive the planet around far out in space.

Condenced energy is a low..energy in motion is a lower energy presure.

EP the center of G is not the center of the planet with a moon in motion.

Re: TJ atoms push themselves?

What idiot flunked physics ad says you cant drvea planet if you can controle the moon orbit far out in space lll
