Hi Randy_Poe, You post via Google because you're not computer literate.

Your deductive powers are as limited as your knowledge of everything else. I can't think of anything more pointless than trying to convince an idiot of my credentials. However, I am secure in the knowledge that employers have seen to pay me a very good wage for the last 30 years for developing new algorithms in a very large variety of application areas, in dozens of different languages from LISP down to bit-twiddling in machine language.

There isn't really any mileage in trying to convince the village idiot that you're competent at what you do. It suffices to convince employers and their customers.
