Huh ? Where in any version of Ellison's script is this ?

And yet, when told to change that, he did rewrite it, so that McCoy is the cause of the passage back in time.

Wrong: LeBeque tells Beckwith that hes not going to keep doing

Beckwith's bidding, Beckwith kills him with a heavy block of jade

( Scene 7 ), and then Beckwith flees to the Transporter Room, where he leaves the chief dazed, and beams down.

Wrong. Beckwith never meets Keeler, until he actually tries to save her from the oncoming truck, in Scenes 97–107

Wrong. Kirk's gonna let her live, and Spock is the one ready to have her die, as the timestream demands that she does.

Correct.

Indeed, just like R's rules demanded that the TNG people all be happy, perfect people, which kinda makes drama not likely...

When he had been told that he would be allowed to do the re-writes, sure.

Ellison explains this, by explaining how the teevee writing business was back then. You had to hustle to writer cattle calls, pitch ideas to many shows, in the hope of getting enough gigs to cover that year's expenses. So, loads of shows started with late scripts, due to that being the business.

Then, how are there so many versions of the script, all by Ellison in the UCLA archives ?

Yet, R's own offered pilot script for " The Omega Glory " was shot that season...

That would have been kewl.

Ellison sat down with Justman, and they worked out the cost and shooting issue.

Read Peter David's afterward.

Ah, more hate: How nice.
