Over the months of lurking I have noticed a lot of flack aimed at NASA coming from Americans here, and comments from them to the effect that IMO NASA should have done this that and the other. So I can't help wondering if any of you lot have ever actually *worked* for NASA, and had hands on experience of operations. i.e. have any of you's ever actually worked in the mission control room OR actually worked at NASA on the spacecraft or rockets over the past 30 years or so since project Mercury?

If the answer is no, then critical comments here at what NASA should do, or criticism as to what NASA is planning to do are are somewhat moot, and NASA will do what it's controlling administrators and their political masters want it to do irrespective as to what is posted here.
