

Re: Mountains Rush and Moore

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.space.shuttle/2004-08/0500.html>

---

From: Alan Anderson (aranders_at_insightbb.com)

Date: 08/20/04

Date: Fri, 20 Aug 2004 00:05:04 GMT

johnejakuhing@yahoo.com (John E. Jaku-Hing) wrote:

- > Since markets are not collaborative by their very nature of being
- > competitive, it is entirely rational to conclude that the internet
- > would be not around as you see it.

The entertainment and automobile markets provides very large counterpoints. Cars from every manufacturer are, by and large, interoperable. Just about every studio's films can be viewed at just about any movie theater. CDs and DVDs from hundreds of publishers work on hundreds of brands of players.

The history of the phonograph can be used as an example of one way a non-government-funded ubiquitous computer network might have arisen.