CNET had some pictures of that CEV thing (computers simulations). The comments from the public were quite negative about returning to 1960s stuff and the CEV/Orion being very unimpressive.

Here, there are almost no discussions left on the shuttle. No worries/discussions about sabotage of a computer for ISS, no discussions about problems with current shuttle launch next week, and I think this trend has been growing for some time now. In the past, there were still good discussions despite the NASA-KNOW-IT-ALL's insistence on discrediting the posters that are not part of their "approved poster" list.

Try looking at www.nasaspaceflight.com. There is a lot more discussion going on there. It is moderated so you will not be attacked for not being on the "approved poster list".

The PAO does nothing to advertise the space program. If they would buy up some network prime time to advertise the presence of NASA TV and the work being done, and the ISS etc... I think the public awareness of NASA would skyrocket and people would write a lot more to their reps in DC. I think this would have a tremendous positive impact on NASA. All we get now is this media crap about drinking and Lisa Nowack. The PAO needs to do its job Public AWARENESS Office. Teddy Roosevelt's mother said "Fill what is empty, empty what is full, and scratch where it itches"
