There was also a lot more paranoia around at that time of course. I'm sure more is now being revealed officially than he ever put on his site. Sad, but there are always those with knee jerk reactions and they would lose face if they changed their minds.

Its always good practice to ask before doing anything that affects others in the field of publicity I found.

Who nows what happend to

Kim Keller
Inspector, Fraternal Order of the Pad Rat who was an active writer to this news group in 1999/2000

He had an excelent web site with great Shuttle photo's....

Where were you when he lost his job? Search Google Groups for "kim keller fired" and you'll find this:

Re: were is Kim keller

| Thanks to all for your show of support. It's deeply appreciated. I do want
| to expand a little on the facts surrounding my termination so everyone
| understands. As far as I can tell, NASA PAO had nothing to do with this.
My
| website and posts were evidently discovered while USA security was | investigating another employee's computer abuse at work – that person and I
| were both posting to the space.com bulletin board and I think that's how | they got interested in me. I was fired because my postings about the work we | were doing allegedly gave away proprietary information, i.e. time required
| to perform tasks and the number of personnel involved. USA felt this info
| was of sufficient quantity to be considered damaging to company interests. I | didn't even realize what I was discussing could be considered that useful to
| a potential competitor. But ignorance is no excuse, so they felt my
"crime"
| was serious enough to warrant firing. I appealed the decision, a lengthy | process that just concluded last week, and lost. I did find out that my | photos were not part of the problem, so I am thinking about putting them
| back on the web.
| Again, thanks for your support.
