

Re: Feather tracks in lens coatings – any preventative?

Re: Feather tracks in lens coatings – any preventative?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.techniques.microscopy/2008-06/msg00016.html>

- From: Richard J Kinch <kinch@xxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Tue, 17 Jun 2008 20:55:03 -0500
-

Charlie+ writes:

Do you think a broad spectrum antifungal cream for a few minutes might help arrest what already started if your theory is correct?

You should be able to just remove it with normal optical cleaning methods.

I should add that most fungus cases don't etch glass, so if you clean it off everything is OK. That's a problem when, for example, it is on the inside of a a multielement camera lens that can't be disassembled.

.